

John Bancks, “The Wish”

Description

JOHN BANCKS

“The Wish”

In dire Machine, of quadrate Figure,
Expos'd to all the pinching Rigour
Of Hunger, Poverty, and Cold,
I by my Bum, and Belly hold;
Pendant, betwixt the Earth and Skie, 5
Like dying Thief – tho' not so high;
Branded with Weaver's odious Name,
Thro' all the World, a Mark of shame.
In this forlorn, neglected Station,
For me to think of Alteration; 10
And, like a true son of Apollo,
To wish for what will never follow;
Must be, I think, by all allow'd
A Project highly just and good.
So many of the rhymeing Tribe 15
Their Means and course of Life prescribe;
And tho', because they wish for too much,
Dame Fortune seldom cares to do much;
Yet Fancy gives them such a Prop,
They still Rhime on, and live by Hope. 20
'Tis Prudence never to Despair,
Tho' all our Stars against us are;
For if the Mind but keeps Decorum,
We're in the Number Beatorum.
Tho' some may blame me to begin 25
With what is oft' the Root of sin;
Since that must make the Mare to go,
I'll wish, as other People do,
For Money, the Delight of Kings,
The Queen of Men, and Queen of Things. 30
Of this, I'd have sufficient store,
(For who's respected when he's poor?)
Enough for all the Needs of Life,
Both of my self, and of a Wife.
If Heav'n a little more should give, 35

Than what may serve us just to Live,
A common Stock the Rest should be
Between my Kindred, Friends, and me.

But here I'm whisper'd by the Muse,
Who, if she might be bold to chuse, 40
Could wish 'twould please impartial Fate
To let it be a Free Estate.

For having heard how hard 'tis found
For Bards to make the Year go round:
That sometimes Pegasus is rash, 45
And flies away from heaps of Cash:
That oft' Poetic Influence

Deprives the Mind of common Sense;
And makes, amidst a croud of Fancies,
The Poet Act Extravagancies: 50

She fearing this might be my Lot,
If Master of my All I got,
Believes it will be more secure
To have my yearly Income sure:
That if by chance, my Stock I spend, 55
Next Quarter the Defect may mend.

The next Thing in my Inventory,
Shall be a Wife – A Husband's Glory –
The greatest Curse, or greatest Blessing,
We're capable of e'er Possessing. 60
Tho' some, perhaps, may Reasons bring
To prove a Wife a needless Thing;
I can't be brought to their Opinion,
Nor care I for their Proofs an Onion.

Since Woman was for Man design'd, 65
I think 'tis fit they should be joyn'd:
And therefore hoping to be Blest,
I'll wish for her among the rest.

Besides, I am not quite so stupid,
As not to fear the Force of Cupid: 70
Cupid, that Fowling, Shooting Boy,
Who hampers all in his Decoy;
And makes us Love, with Dart and Bow,
Whether we willing are, or no.

'Tis like, if he were not so busy, 75
Most Men unmarried might be easy:
Old Maids might then be very plenty;
And scarce a marry'd Wife in Twenty:
Strephon would not for Delia Mourn;
Nor Daphnis Sigh for Love's return; 80
But whilst he makes such Work about 'em,
There's few can be Content without 'em;

For when he throughly does his Duty,
 Wry Necks and crooked Backs make Beauty.
 Since then he Rules so absolute, 85
 'Tis vain for Mortals to Dispute:
 For Man to love a Woman is
 As natural, as Welshman Cheese:
 And if I love, I'll have a Wife,
 Because I chuse an honest Life. 90
     Well 'tis agreed – But now let's see
 What sort of Woman she must be;
 I'd have her Modest, Brisk and Young,
 And Woman all – except her Tongue:
 As Pious as the very best; 95
 Yet not a Bigot to her Priest:
 Good-natur'd, Gentle, full of Duty,
 And Mistress of a little Beauty:
 So Witty, Secret, and Discreet,
 That Wife and Friend, in one might meet. 100
 Her Portion – be it great or small,
 Or, if Fate please, be't none at all.
 My Former Wish shall this prevent,
 If I've enough, I'll be Content:
 Tho' few are easy in their Station, 105
 For once I'd step besides the Fashion.
     When Hymen has the Business done,
 And she and I are joyn'd in one;
 For fear my dearest Bride should mutter,
 Because I've got no where to put her; 110
 As well as to divert my Mind,
 If e'er my Charmer prove unkind;
 I'd have a pleasant Country Seat,
 By Nature made, for Love's retreat:
 A purling Stream should murmur by, 115
 And Woods, and Meadows should be nigh:
 The Woods, at Noon, for Shade I'd use;
 At Night, the Meads should please the Muse.
 My Garden fill'd with Trees and Flow'rs
 Should yield an hundred shady Bowers: 120
 And all the tuneful, feather'd Quire
 Should dwell therein, to wake my Lyre.
 Here, if the Fumes of too much Study
 Should make the Spring of Fancy muddy;
 My Spirits I'd exhilarate, 125
 In Consort with my lovely Mate:
 Our Conversation, soft and kind,
 Should turn on what came first in Mind:
 Yet so we'd always wind the String up,

That Love alone, the Rear should bring up. 130
 My House should be of comely Size,
 I think the Ground should round it rise:
 It's little Front should meet the Morn,
 And that, a Dial should adorn:
 A Court, before you could arrive at 135
 The Door, should make it Safe, and Private:
 In fine, I'd have to make't compleat,
 Nothing superfluous, all Things neat:
 'Twould be a kind of petty Throne,
 If 'twere a Manour, and my own. 140
 Were I to chuse my Furniture,
 I'd have what's Needful, and no more:
 But whilst I wanted not for Treasure,
 My Spouse in this should use her Pleasure:
 For if we cross a Woman's Fancy, 145
 We know what spiteful Things she can say.
 Of the best Books I'd have a few,
 Whose Wit and Sense, would still be New:
 Both Ancient, of establish'd Fame:
 And Modern of a rising Name. 150
 These I'd on all Occasions use,
 T'inform, or please me, or amuse:
 From these I'd choicest Maxims draw,
 And make them, of my Life, the Law.
 For Servants – if I must have any, 155
 They should be Sober, and not many:
 A Couple would sufficient be,
 My Wife a Maid, a Man for me.
 A Friend's a Thing so seldom known,
 'Tis very hard to meet with one; 160
 Yet I might chuse, I would have two,
 Of my own Sex, Good, Wise, and True:
 Who could direct an infant Muse;
 Knew when to blame, and when t'excuse:
 With these I'd ev'ry Day converse, 165
 To them each rising Thought rehearse;
 Their Judgment should the Sentence give
 To which should Die, and which should Live.
 In Fortunes Mazes, if perplexed,
 Or with Domestic Troubles vexed; 170
 To them I'd straight repair for Rest,
 And leave my Sorrows in their Breast.
 To welcome these, I'd spread my Board
 With what the Country would afford:
 A Cheerful, but a mod'rate Glass 175

Should, as a sign of Friendship, pass

Thus far my pensive Mind had gone,

And, thinking ev'ry Thing my own,

To Rapture I was almost brought,

'Till stopping to correct a Thought,

180

I found 'twas all a Dream, a Fable,

A false Chimaera, nothing stable;

Still in the Loom I must remain,

All higher Thoughts, I doubt, are vain.

NOTES:

1 quadrate "Something which is square or rectangular in shape," in this case a weaver's hand loom (OED).

5 Pendant Suspended, "in a hanging position" (OED).

11 Apollo Greek god associated with poetry (Britannica).

24 Beatorum Latin: prosperous, of the blessed.

27 that must make the Mare to go "Money makes the mare to go" is a proverbial phrase that means "without money little can be achieved" (ODP).

42 Free Estate Freehold, the "permanent and absolute tenure of land or property with freedom to dispose of it at will" (OED).

45 Pegasus In Greek Mythology, the winged horse that is "often represented as the favourite steed of the Muses, bearing poets on their flights of poetic inspiration" (OED).

49 croud Archaic spelling of "crowd."

70 Cupid "In Roman Mythology, the god of love" (OED).

101 Portion Marriage portion, "dowry" (OED).

107 Hymen "In Greek and Roman mythology: The god of marriage, represented as a young man carrying a torch and veil" (OED).

113 Country Seat "A (large) country house and estate inhabited by a family belonging to the nobility, landed gentry, or other wealthy class, usually as its principal rural residence" (OED).

120 Bower "Idealized abode" (OED).

121 Quire Archaic spelling of "choir" (OED).

122 Lyre "A stringed instrument of the harp kind, used by the Greeks for accompanying song and recitation" (OED).

133 should Emended from "shold" (printer's error).

134 Dial Sundial.

173 Board “A table spread for a repast” (OED).

182 Chimaera “An unreal creature of the imagination” (OED).

SOURCE: The Weavers Miscellany: Or, Poems on Several Subjects (London, 1730), pp. 9-15. [Google Books]

Edited by Devin Logan