

Anonymous, "Sonnet, on the Inhabitants of London"

Description

ANONYMOUS

“Sonnet, on the Inhabitants of LONDON”

In London scarce a bird but may be found:

The sun-ey’d eagle borne on lofty wing,
Linnets that adulate the smile of Spring,
And ravens croaking with portentous sound:

Owls wrapt in dulness, crows tow’rd carrion bound, 5

Parrots whose squalling notes incessant ring,
Swallows that dare to chatter near a King,

And gabbling geese nice students wish were drown’d:

Mud-haunting ducks that dabble in the street,

Fine birds of paradise with little feet, 10

Peacocks that spread a gaudy-painted fan;
Grain-raking poultry, enemies to flow’rs,
The stork imperious that all things devours,
A phoenix there would be an honest man.

NOTES:

3 Linnets A type of finch known for its pleasant song with quick trills and tweets; adulate “To flatter in an obsequious or sycophantic manner, to fawn on” (QED).

4 portentous “Ominous, threatening” (QED).

10 birds of paradise A family of birds found throughout the islands of New Guinea which are recognizable by the males’ highly elaborate plumage.

13 imperious “Exercising a commanding influence; ruling, sovereign, dominant” (QED).

14 Phoenix A bird in Greek mythology that was characteristically long lived and went through cycles of death and rebirth from its ashes. Also an early symbol of Christianity.

Source: The Gentleman’s Magazine (July, 1777), p. 345.

Edited by Tyler Greer