

James Woodhouse, "Benevolence, An Ode"

Description

JAMES WOODHOUSE

“BENEVOLENCE, An ODE”

Inscribed to my Friends

Let others boast Palladian skill
 The sculptur'd dome to raise;
 To scoop the vale, to swell the hill,
 Or lead the smooth, meand'ring rill
 In ever-varying maze; 5

 To strike the lyre
 With Homer's fire,
 Or Sappho's tender art;
 Or Handel's notes with sweeter strains inspire,
 O'er Phidia's chissel to preside, 10

 Or Titian's glowing pencil guide
 Through ev'ry living part.

Ah! what avails it thus to shine,
 By ev'ry art refinâ€™d;
 Except BENEVOLENCE combine 15

 To humanize the mind!
 The Parian floor,
 Or vivid cieling, fresco'd o'er,
 With glaring charms the gazing eye may fire;
 Yet may their lords, like statues cold, 20

 Devoid of sympathy, behold
 Fair worth with want repine,
 Or indigence, expire;
 Nor ever know the noblest use of gold.

'Tis yours, with sympathetic breast, 25

 To stop the rising sigh,
 And wipe the tearful eye,
 Nor let repining merit sue unblest;
 This is a more applausive taste
 Than spending wealth 30

Â Â 30

In gorgeous waste,
Or with dire luxury destroying health;
It sweetens life with ev'ry virtuous joy,
And wings the conscious hours with gladness as they fly.

NOTES:

Subtitle – His first two elegies being seen by some gentlemen and ladies in London in manuscript, they made a small subscription for him; and these were the friends he speaks of – [Author's Note].

1 Palladian A reference to the neoclassical architectural movement inspired by the Italian Renaissance architect, Andrea Palladio (1508-1580). Palladian style was strongly based on symmetry and clarity and remained popular through the mid eighteenth century (Britannica).
