

Mary Barber, â??Written for a Gentlewoman in Distress. To her Grace ADELIDA, Dutchess of Shrewsburyâ?•

Description

[MARY BARBER]

â??Written for a Gentlewoman in Distress. To her Grace ADELIDA, Dutchess of Shrewsburyâ?•

Might I inquire the Reasons of my Fate,
Or with my Maker dare expostulate;
Did I, in prospâ??rous Days, despise the Poor,
Or drive the friendless Stranger from my Door?
Was not my Soul pourâ??d out for the Distressâ??d? 5
Did I not vindicate the Poor oppressâ??d?
Did not the Orphanâ??s Cry with me prevail?
Did I not weep the Woes I could not heal?
Why then, Thou gracious, Thou all-powâ??rful God,
Why do I feel thâ?? Oppressorâ??s Iron Rod? 10
Why thus the Scorners cruel Taunts endure,
Who basely fret the Wounds, they will not cure?
O Thou, whose Mercy does to All extend,
Say, shall my Sorrows never, never, end?
Let not my Tears for ever, fruitless, flow; 15
Commiserate a Wretch, oâ??erwhelmâ??d with Woe;
No longer let Distress my Bosom tear:
O shield me from the Horrors of Despair!

Forgive me, Madam, that I thus impart
The Throbs, the Anguish, of a breaking Heart. 20
Oft, when my wearyâ??d Eyes can weep no more,
To sooth my Woes, I read your Letters oâ??er.
Goodness, and Wit, and Humour, there I find;
And view with Joy those Pictures of your Mind;
With Pleasure on the lovâ??d Resemblance gaze, 25
Till peaceful Slumbers on my Eye-lids seize.
Then, then, Imagination glads my Sight
With transient Images of past Delight;
My aking Heart of evâ??ry Care beguiles;
Then TALBOT lives, and ADELIDA smiles. 30

Delightful Forms! why will you fleet away,
And leave me to the Terrors of the Day?
In vain from Reason I expect Relief;

For sad Reflection doubles ev'ry Grief.
 Some of my Friends in Death's cold Arms I see; 35
 Others, tho, living, yet are dead to me?
 Of Friends, and Children both, I am bereft,
 And soon must lose the only Blessing left;
 A Husband form'd for Tenderness and Truth,
 The lov'd, the kind Companion of my Youth; 40
 With him, thro' various Storms of Fate I pass'd;
 Relentless Fate! And must we part at last?
 O King of Terrors, I invoke thy Power;
 Oh! stand between me and that dreadful Hour;
 From that sad Hour thy wretched Suppliant save; 45
 Oh! shield me from it! Hide me in the Grave!

NOTES:

Title ADELIDA, Dutchess of Shrewsbury Adelhilda Talbot (née Palleotti) (1660-1726), married Charles Talbot, Duke of Shrewsbury, in 1705.

2 expostulate – To argue or debate• (OED).

10 Iron Rod – A symbol of power or tyranny• (OED).

16 Wretch – A miserable, unhappy, or unfortunate person• (OED).

30 TALBOT Charles Talbot, Duke and twelfth Earl of Shrewsbury (1660-1718). English statesman and leading figure in the Glorious Revolution, in support of William and Mary. Also played a key role in the peaceful succession of George I in 1714 (Britannica).

43 King of Terrors – Death personified• (OED).

45 Suppliant – A person who makes a humble or earnest plea to another, especially to a person in power or authority• (OED).

SOURCE: Mary Barber, Poems on Several Occasions (London, 1735), pp. 51-53. [Google Books]

Edited by Madelyn Yukich