

Robert Luck, "The Dry Joke"

Description

ROBERT LUCK

"The Dry Joke"

God Bacchus well warmed,
With Beauty was charmed;
And Cupid's bright Mother address.
She cried, you are silly â
I hate you â nor will I
Be thus by a Toper cared.

5

Thus slighted the God,
With an angry Nod,
Said, Adieu to you, Madam â in vain
You'll try to allure me:
Your Pride shall secure me,
From Courting coy Beauty again.

10

What Bacchus then spoke,
She hoped was in joke:
And again Wine and Love would agree.
But he, as malicious
As she was capricious,
Her Error soon made her to see.

15

For Nymphs sweet as May,
All met at a Play;
Where each was as fine as a Queen.
In each lovely Creature,
Art yielded to Nature;
Though decked all in Jewels are seen.

20

Apollo was there,
To charm every ear;
But (what a mild Dove would provoke.)
The Beaus who appeared on
The Stage, silly learned on;
And left the fair Circle to choke.

25

30

Now Venus in vain,
Does to Bacchus complain,
That Beauty was dying with thirst.
The God reply'd, smiling,
Her Coyneſſe reviling 35
Why did you provoke me then firſt?

O ye Ladies, beware,
Be as kind as you are fair;
Nor requite your fond Slaves with disdain.
A Lover defeated, 40
With vengeance is hated;
And Mischief still runs in his Brain.

Edited by Ivan Li