

Anonymous, "An Invocation to Poverty"

Description

ANONYMOUS

An INVOCATION to POVERTY. By an HONOURABLE COMMONER,
After the Reflection on his PENURY, thrown out in the House of Commons last Sessions.

Oh! Poverty! of pale, consumptive hue,
If thou delight'st to haunt me, still in view;
If still thy presence must my steps attend,
At least continue as thou art my Friend!
When Scotch example bids me be unjust, 5
False to my word or faithless to my trust,
Bid me the baneful error quickly see,
And shun the world, to find Repose with thee;
When Vice to Wealth would turn my partial eye,
Or Intrest shut my ear to Sorrow's cry, 10
Or Courtier's custom would my reason bend,
My Foe to flatter, or desert my Friend:
Oppose, kind Poverty, thy temper'd shield,
And bear me off unvanquish'd from the field.
If giddy Fortune e'er return again, 15
With all her idle restless, wanton train, â
Her magic glass should false Ambition hold,
Or Avrice bid me put my trust in Gold,
To my relief, thou virtuous Goddess, haste,
And with thee bring thy daughters ever chaste, 20
Health! Liberty! and Wisdom! sisters bright,
Whose charms can make the worst condition light,
Beneath the hardest fate the mind can cheer,
Can heal Affliction and disarm Despair!
In chains, in torments, pleasure can bequeath, 25
And dress in smiles the tyrant hour of Death!

NOTES:

Title Honourable Commoner Someone not born of nobility, but who possesses nobility; Penury Poverty; House of Commons The lower house of England's legislative branch.

1 Consumptive Pale, as if dying of tuberculosis.

5 Scotch The Scottish people.

8 Repose Rest.

11 Courtier Attendant of the royal court.

SOURCE: The Gentleman's Magazine, Vol. 46 (September 1776), p. 428. [J. Paul Leonard Library]

Edited by George Griffith